

Comanche Captives

Lt. William Forrest Baldwin was flaming mad: he had been dragged back from sick leave on urgent call only to be told that it was not for active duty that he was wanted. No indeed. The Army wanted him to nursemaid 300 Comanche prisoners up to Fort Sill. This was a distance of only 400 miles through the heart of Indian territory where hundreds of Comanches, still free, could be counted on to conduct a running fight every inch of the way. For this simple shepherding job the Lieutenant had been assigned, naturally, only one platoon - and, naturally, like himself, they were all defectives, barred from active duty.
