

Fifteen masterful short stories focused on the lives of men and women in foreign lands as well as of Americans of foreign descent. The vast majority of these tales are set in the Arab and Muslim lands of the Middle East and Eastern Europe, although you will also find tales set in India and New York City's Chinatown, and even a story of a Japanese samurai in Germany. Abdullah is said to have been a man of the world, widely traveled and possessing keen insight. As such he was uniquely capable of allowing his characters humanity and various cultural distinctions to shine through in every story. Written as popular fiction, these stories are representative of Achmed Abdullah at his very best and are driven by the emotions and psychologies of the characters, not merely external circumstances and action as in so much pulp fiction of the day. A must for fans of early pulp fiction and to students of early 20th-century literature, for as this collection well shows, Abdullah was more than the run-of-the-mill pulp writer, and his work deserves to be viewed as part of a broader range of literary works.
