

Goodnight, Nobody

Michael Knight received a special PEN/Hemingway citation for his startling, finely crafted first collection, Dogfight and Other Stories, and The Wall Street Journal called Divining Rod a potent novel from a talented new author. Goodnight, Nobody, a brilliant collection of stories about rediscovered love, reconciliation, and peace amid the trials of everyday life, proves once again that he is a genius of the ordinary (Frederick Barthelme). In each story, characters are surprised by their mettle even as they recognize their fallibility; they are convinced of the power of love, family, and trust even as they experience the danger of obsession, anger, and simple accident. In the subtle romance Birdland, a beautiful ornithologist from up north does her best to deny the lure of a parrot-populated Alabama village and its resident driftwood carver. In the stylistically daring masterpiece Killing Stonewall Jackson, a rough band of Confederate soldiers contemplate the distant, fabled Stonewall Jackson, the man who has sent them to a hellish battlefield. Stirring tenderness in equal parts with grit, Michael Knight infuses his luminous new collection with graceful humor and uncommon empathy for the self-destructed. An exquisite new short-story collection by an award-winning writer of the first rank -- Esquire
